3 Qualities Of A True Friendship: Care, Support, Loyalty

A friend is someone difficult to find. A friend is someone you can always count on when times are tough. For example, a good friend is there when you are at the lowest times in your life. Friends, who pretend to care and then turn around gossiping are the start of the drama. As opposed to a friend that will support you in beneficial decisions, these toxic people cause others to lose assurance and trust in new friendships that they have recently forged.

First, an important quality for a friend is to be caring. In friends, you look for a lot of things. Some people may want adventurous friends and others might want calm friends to match their style. Caring requires personal insight, self-discipline, and unconditional positive regard for a friend. Although there are many forms of friendship, certain characteristics are present in many types of bonds between friends. For example, characteristics like affection, kindness, love, empathy, sympathy, honesty, loyalty, generosity, forgiveness, and the ability to not judge others. These characteristics grow a healthy and trustful bond between you and your friend or partner. One reason a best friend should be caring is because Affection in a friendship is a priority. Affection can be shown by looks, words, or gestures. It conveys love and allows new connections to take place. For example, when you get broken up with or cheated on by a boy you feel sad. Best friends will always be there to comfort you and to make sure you are happy. If a friend was caring, then a friend would help and support you in the decisions you make and help you get out of situations that are tough to get out yourself. All in all, a caring friend is a good friend to have.

Second, an important quality for a friend is to be supportive. Fader states, “a good friend will have your very best interests and heart and will be there to help you when you have a problem.” A best friend should be supportive because the love they give in tough situations is helpful to have. Having love as strength is not about the capacity to love. As such, it is about being involved in a loving and supportive relationship. To illustrate, a supportive friend should always give the correct advice when you need it. It wouldn't matter if it was about a boy or an emotional problem they should always be supportive and give the right advice. If a friend was supportive, then he or she would sit with you for hours and stick with you when you needed it. Clearly, a supportive friend would want you to take a stand, and help others make a stand.

Finally, another important quality for a friend is to be loyal. Everyone considers loyalty to be defined as respect, honesty, love and the ability to wait as long as the other needs when they need space and time. When you have certain tasks and responsibilities you become devoted to completing them. You become devoted to performing at your very best and you make sure the least amount of mistakes are made. “Real friends don't let life interrupt them,” Loyal friends are something that we all wish we had more of. You know the friends I'm talking about, the ones who show you complete devotion and will always back you up without question. Real friends don't let anyone break them apart cause at the end of the day they have each other. Also, having someone watching your back all the time is a complete upgrade, These friends can shoot down rumors about you and prevent them from spreading, which saves you a lot of trouble and frustration. To summarize these reasons loyal friends should always be gaining your trust not losing it. As one can see, a loyal friend will always stay with you no matter what.

As one can plainly see, having a real friend is the best thing that could possibly happen to one. If more people had these qualities, then friendships would start to blossom and people would trust more. It's too bad that not a lot of real friends exist in this small world.
