Selfishness And Inequality In The Animal Farm

The novel Animal Farm, by the political writer George Orwell, is a story parallel to the events of the Russian Revolution. It features the brutal rise to power of one history's most notorious dictators – Josef Stalin, who is portrayed by the tyrannical pig Napoleon. After the animals of Manor Farm expel their human master, Napoleon eventually manages to seize total control over every aspect of the animals' lives.

After the revolution, the Manor Farm was renamed the Animal Farm and the seven commandments of the animal were established to ensure equality. Pigs have become supervisors of the farm. However, the rivalry between the two Snowball pigs and Napoleon made Napoleon use force. Napoleon ordered his dogs to chase the snowball from the farm until he became the only leader. After the snowballs are expelled, the animals work harder and the pigs do less. This is evidenced by evidence from the text where he says: 'Huge rocks, far too large to be used as they were...

Animals whipped ropes around these then all together, cows, horses, sheep, any animal that can hold the rope - even pigs sometimes join the ... 'Sometimes it's the key word because it means the pigs just came and helped so they can get glory and reward themselves. Other animals have things taken from them by pigs, things like their food, so pigs can enjoy privileges. One example is: "The apples and milk are an ideal illustration of Napoleon and the pigs using the other animals. By Napoleon desiring the milk and apples he determined that it was for him and the pigs without even telling the other critters they were swallowing them.

But whenever the animals started to notice the milk and apples were gone each day that they requested the pigs and Squealer simply explained: "You do not imagine, I hope, that we pigs are doing this in a spirit of selfishness and privilege? Our sole object in taking these things is to preserve our health" and is also, outsmarting the other creatures for the benefit of these pigs. It was mixed every day in the blending of pigs. Napoleon's selfishness and corrupt power made him commit various atrocities against his comrades.

As a result, the lives of animals except pigs and dogs were tyranny and inequality. Napoleon was worse than their former master, the animals spent almost the rest of his life starving and working on the windmill that had been destroyed several times, the cancellation of Sunday morning meetings, the public culling of animals, and drinking alcohol were the most important changes that facilitated the transformation of the animal farm, and Napoleon as the most important responsible for the fall of the virtuous vision LAMZ animal. Easy to cancel meetings Sunday morning turning farm animals because the animals have lost their right to vote. It was a tradition that was established after the revolution is on Sunday, where he met all the animals together in the General Assembly of the morning meeting In order to plan to work the following week and discuss decisions.

Here Orwell cynically explained the transformation of European societies after the Russian revolution that ended Stalin's oppressive rule, and that the real victim in the revolutions is the people who expect a happy ending and turn it into a painful reality.
